COMMENTARY

Whenever fear grips the market, small and mid-sized companies tend to underperform large companies, perhaps because of their narrower shareholder support base.

But over time, small and mid-sized companies grow earnings faster than large companies - since 2013, earnings for the MSCI World Small Cap and Mid Cap indices have grown at 6.3% and 5.8% respectively, faster than the growth rate of 4.5% for Large caps.

That shouldn't be a surprise - it's easier to grow off an earnings base of $100m than Apple's current $100bn

This higher growth rate is the most likely reason why small and mid-sized companies have historically traded at higher earnings multiples than large caps: 29x and 22x vs 19x

But in recent years that premium has contracted, with mid-caps currently trading at a meaningful discount to both history (17x vs 22x) and large caps' 19x

Part of this is explained by most passive money being market cap-weighted and therefore flowing into large companies. Part may also be due to the perceived safety of large companies (although Tesla's 20% plunge in October might help change that perception). Nonetheless, we think this represents a significant opportunity for investors to increase exposure to smaller and mid-sized companies. Thankfully, we're of the size where we can easily "fish in these pools".

With the right management, smaller companies can be nimbler to changing conditions and this helps them grow faster.

For example, over the past 10 years, Nike has doubled revenue and earnings, but Skechers, a company we hold, has increased revenue fourfold and earnings tenfold.

Yet Nike is trading at 29 times earnings, double the valuation of Skechers.

When the market recognises the undervaluation, price moves can be fast and substantial. In early November, a top 10 holding, Expedia, beat expectations and announced a $5bn buyback, equal to almost 40% of its shares in issue.

The share price increased 19% in one day.

This serves as a useful reminder that investors shouldn't wait until their perception of the macro environment improves because the return opportunities may no longer be there.

The top 10% of funds in each category receive 5 stars, the next 22.5% receive 4 stars, the next 35% receive 3 stars, the next 22.5% receive 2 stars and the bottom 10% receive 1 star. The Overall Morningstar Rating for a fund is derived from a weighted average of the performance figures associated with its three-, five- and 10-year (if applicable) Morningstar Rating metrics. The Fund's USD Investor Class has received an Overall and a 10-Year 5-star rating as at 2/8/2023.
